From the Newark Daily Advertiser. AMERICAN MANUFACTURES.

The subject of manufactures has grown to such magnitude. both as regards the vast amount of capital employed and the great and diversified interests involved, and moreover as it is soon to come before Congress as a question of national policy, some little consideration of the subject may not be inappropriate.

So early as 1699, we find the British Parliament engaged in legislative acts to cripple ests in this country by interdicting the shipment of woollen yarn or woolen manufactures from their Colonies to any place whatever; and in 1719 the House of Commons declared that Outrages in Toxas. A short time since, "the erecting manufactories in the Colonies says the Colerado Gazette, a party of sottlers tended to lessen their dependence on Great ton in Shelby caunty, headed by a Capt. The report farther states that all the iron consumption, nor did New York at that time ber A. D. 1841. Jersey was no more formidable in this respect, as its traffic consisted of necessary articles, shipped from Pennsylvania and New York.

At this period an act was passed by Parliament declaring upon information that hats were made to considerable extent in the Colonies, and that none of that article should be exported. 'The same act limited the number of apprentices who were to be engaged in this business, and prohibited the exportation of hats from one Colony to another. Other manufactures were regarded with equal jealousy. Such is a brief outline of the condition of American manufactures while the United States were Colonies of the parent government, and such the policy of Great Britain in 1732. From that time down to the period when this country was separated from the British Crown, the policy of the mother country was in its restrictive character uniform and steady. All the ingenuity which her statesmen could com mand was brought into exercise, to embarrass the onward progress of Amercan industry, whenever and wherever it promised to interfere with British cupidity.
